- Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions that follow:

Imagine a time, not too far away, when remembering your favourite day will be as easy as saving a computer file! We are getting very close to it. Scientists are trying to find out new ways to store people's memories.

Think about it – you could capture the joy and laughter of your birthday party, the thrill and excitement of a field trip, or the beautiful and meaningful words of a special song. All these important memories could be carefully saved and stored. Later, you could relive those wonderful moments on a screen, just like watching a movie of your own life. You could even share your memories with friends and family, allowing them to experience what you did! It's like having a super-powered memory bank that you can access anytime. This could be especially helpful for people who have trouble remembering things, allowing them to reconnect with their past.

However, there are also some worries. Some people could see your memories without asking. That would be a serious problem! That's why protecting these personal experiences is important. It's a complex idea, but scientists are working hard to make it safe, secure, and possible so that everyone can benefit from this amazing technology in the future.
